The Closing Scene.

BY T. B. READ.

The following is pronounced by the Westminister Review to be unquestionably the finest American poem ever written:

Within the sober realm of leafless trees,
The russet year inhaled the dreamy air;
Like some tanned reaper in his hour of ease,
When all the fields are lying brown and bare.

The gray barns looking from their hazy hills
O'er the dun waters widening in the vales,
Sent down the air a greeting to the mills,
On the dull thunder of alternate flails.

All sights were mellowed and all sounds subdued,
The hills seemed further and the stream sang low,
As in a dream the distant woodman hewed
His winter log with many a muffled blow.

The embattled forests, erewhile armed with gold,
Their banner bright with every martial hue,
Now stood like some sad, beaten host of old,
Withdrawn afar in Time's remotest blue.

On sombre wings the vulture tried his flight;
The dove scarce heard his sighing mate's complaint;
And like a star, slow drowning in the light,
The village church vane seemed to pale and faint.

The sentinel cock upon the hillside crew—
Crew twice—and all was stiller than before;
Silent, till some replying warden blew
His alien horn, and then was heard no more.

Where erst the jay, within the elm's tall crest,
Made garrulous trouble round her unfledged young,
And where the oriole swung her swaying nest,
By every light wind like a cradle swung,

Where sang the noisy martens of the eaves,
The busy swallows circling ever near—
Foreboding, as the rustic mind believes,
An early harvest and a plenteous year;

Where every bird that wiled the vernal feast,
Shook the sweet slumber from its wings at morn,
To warn the reaper of the rosy east—
All now was sunless, empty and forlorn.

Alone, from out the stubble, piped the quail,
And creaked the crow through all the dreary gloom;
Alone the pheasant drumming in the vale,
Made echo in the distance to the cottage loom.

There was no bud, no bloom, upon the bowers,
The spiders moved their thin shrouds night by night;
The [illegible]sole flower, the only ghost of flowers,
S. B. I slowly fy—[illegible]ed noiselessly out of sight.

And [illegible]d this, in this most dreary air,
And where the woodline sheets upon the porch
Of [illegible]inson leaves, at every year stood there,
Pilling the beer with its inverted torch.

Amid all this, the centre of the scene,
The white-haired matron with monotonous tread,
Plied the swift wheel, and with her joyous mien
Sat like Fate, and watched the flying [illegible]read.

She had known sorrow. He had walked with her,
Oft supped and broke with her the ashen crust,
And [illegible]n the dead leaves still heard the stir
Of his thick mantle trailing in the dust.

While yet her cheek was bright with summer bloom,
Her country summoned and she gave her all,
And [illegible]e war bowed to her his saddle plume—
Regave the sword to rust upon the wall.

Regave the sword but not the hand that drew
And struck for liberty the dying blow;
Nor him who, to his sire and country true,
Fell 'mid the ranks of the invading foe.

Long, but not loud, the droning wheel went on,
Like the low murmur of a hive at noon!
Long, but not loud, the memory of the gone
Breathed through her lips a sad and tuneful tone.

At last the thread was snapped, her head was bowed;
Life dropped the distaff through her hands serene;
And loving neighbors soothed her careful shroud,
While death and winter closed the autumn scene.

Arctic Research.

Dr. C. F. Hall, the Arctic explorer, who has recently returned to New York from an extended research within the North Polar circle, furnishes a a narrative of his investigations and discoveries in that region, from which we take the following:

REPULSE BAY, June 20, 1869

Henry Grinnell:

DEAR SIR—This day I have returned from a sledge journey of ninety days to and from King William's Land. It was my purpose, and every preparation was made, to make this journey last season, but my attention then having been called to Melville Peninsula, in the vicinity of Fury and Hecla straits, where native report had it that white men had been seen. I directed my expedition there, via Amitoke, Ooglik isle, Ig-loo lik, with the ardent hope and expectation of rescuing alive some of Sir Franklin's lost companions. The result of this journey was the finding of a tenting place of a few white men and a stone pillar they had erected close by it at the bottom of Parry Bay, which is some fifty miles south of the western outlet of Fury and Hecla Straits, and the visiting of the several places where white men and their traces had been seen by natives of Ig-loolik and vicinity in or about the years 1858-7. I also gained much information from the natives of Ig-loo lik, North Ooglik isle, and thereabouts, that confirmed the report I had heard in the winter of 1867-8, which I have already stated. And still further proofs of this report have been also obtained on my late visit to King William's Land. My sledge journey to the straits of Fury and Hecla, and thence down to Parry Bay and back to Repulse Bay by the route already defined consumed ninety-six days.

The result of my sledge journey to King William's Land may be summed up thus:

None of Sir John Franklin's companions ever reached or died on Montreal Island. It was late in July, 1848, that Crozier and his party, of about forty or forty-five, passed down the west coast of King William's Land, in the vicinity of Cape Herschel. The party was dragging two sledges on the sea ice, which was nearly in its last stage of dissolution—one a large sledge laden with an awning covered boat, and the other a small one, laden with provisions and camp material. Just before Crozier and party arrived at Cape Herschel they were met by four families, of natives, and both parties went into camp near each other. Two Esquimaux men, who were of the native party, gave me much sad but interesting information. Some of it stirred my heart with sadness, intermingled with rage, for it was a confession that they, with their companions, did secretly and hastily abandon Crozier and his party to suffer and die for want of provisions, when, in truth, it was in the power of the natives to save every man alive. The next trace of Crozier and his party is to be found in the skeleton which M'Clintock discovered a little below, to the southward and eastward of Herschel. This was never found by the natives. The next trace is a camping place on the sea shore of King William's Island, about three miles eastward of Peiffer river, where two men died and received Christian burial. At this place fish bones were found by the natives, which showed them that Crozier and his party had caught while there a species of fish, excellent for food, with which the sea there abounds. The next trade of this party occurs some five or six miles eastward, on a long, low point of King William's Island, where one man died and was buried. Then about south southeast, two and a half miles farther, the next trace occurs, on Todd's inlet, where the remains of five men lie. The next certain trace of this party is on the west side of Point Richardson, on some low land that is an island or a part of the main land as the tide may be. Here the awning covered boat and the remains of about thirty or thirty-five of Crozier's party were found by the Foo-yet-ta, of whom Sir John Ross has given a description in the account of his voyage in the Victory, 1829-34.

In the spring of 1861, when the snow was nearly all gone, an Esquimaux party conducted by a native well known throughout the northern regions, found two boats, with many skeletons in and about them. One of these boats was previously found by M'Clintock; the other was found lying from one quarter to one half mile distant, and must have been completely entombed in snow at the time M'Clintock's parties were there, or they most assuredly would have seen it. In and about this, besides the many skeletons alluded to, were found many relics, most of them similar in character to those enumerated by M'Clintock as having been found in the boat he discovered. The native who conducted this native in its search over King William's Land is the same individual who gave Dr. Rea the first information about whites having died to the westward of where he [Dr. Rea] then was [Pelly Bay,] in the spring of 1854. His name is In-nook-poo zhe jock, and he is a native of Netchille, a very great traveler and very intelligent. He is, in fact, a walking history of the fate of Sir John Franklin's expedition. This native I met when within one day's sledge of King William's Land—off Point Dryden—and after stopping a few days among his people, he accompanied me to the places I visited on and about King William's Land.

The same year that the Erebus and Terror were abandoned one of them consummated the Great Northwest Passage, having five men aboard. The evidence of the exact number is circumstantial. Everything about this northwest passage ship of Sir John Franklin's expedition was in complete order; four boats were hanging high up at the ship's sides and one was on the quarter deck; the vessel was in its winter housing of sail or tent cloth. This vessel was discovered by the Ook-joo-lik natives near the O'Reilly island, latitude sixty-eight degrees thirty minutes north, longitude ninety-nine degrees eight minutes west, early in the spring of 1849, it being frozen in in the midst of a smooth and unbroken floe of ice of only one winter's formation. From certain evidence I have gained both at Ig-loolik and King William's Land there must have been a dog of the greyhound species belonging to one or the other of the two ships. I only know this through native testimony. It is quite likely that some one in England can tell whether there was a dog on board either of the ships when Sir John left, in 1845.

To complete the history of Sir John Franklin's last expedition one must spend a summer on King William's Land, with a considerable party, whose only business should be to make searches for records which beyond doubt he buried on that island. I am certain from what I have heard the natives say, and from what I saw myself, that little or nothing more can be gained by making searches there when the land is clothed in its winter garb, for the natives have made search after search over all the coast of King William's Land, on either side, from its southern extreme up to Cape Felix, the northern point, for anything and everything that belonged to the companions of Sir John Franklin, and these searches have been made when the snow had nearly all disappeared from the land.

INDEPENDENT.

A Superb Journal for every Home.—We do not believe there is any way in which our readers could invest the small sum of one dollar and a half where it would bring them so large a return both in profit and satisfaction, as in a subscription for the elegant journal of which we have just now received the October number—the American Agriculturist. It was originally started 28 years ago, specially as a rural journal, and its motto ever since has been "Excelsior." Its size is now increased to 44 pages, with a beautiful cover upon each number. Now is the time to subscribe, for the publishers offer the last two months of this year free, to all new subscribers received in October, for 1870. Four copies are supplied for five dollars. A valuable list of Premiums is offered to those securing clubs of subscribers. Address Orange Judd & Co., 245 Broadway, N. Y.

The Lady's Friend.—The November number of this popular monthly has a life-like steel plate of the Sisters, such sisters as may be found in many a sweet American home. The colored fashion plate is gay and graceful. A romantic picture, illustrating Herrick's Night Piece to Julia, and a group of Dresses for Young Ladies, in which that important portion of humanity will find some loves of toilettes, introduce a series of uncommonly taking illustrations. Price $2,50 a year. Four copies, $6. Five copies and one gratis, $8. The Lady's Friend and the Saturday Evening Post $4. Specimen copies ten cents.

The Riverside Magazine, like its cotemporaries, puts out its programme for the coming year, but its monthly numbers are the most satisfactory evidence of its good intentions. The November one, now ready, contains twenty illustrations, one of them full page, and seventeen articles, ranging over a pretty wide field. It would be a queer taste that found nothing to suit in this variety. $2,50 a year. Published by Hurd & Houghton, New York.

The Phrenological Journal for November, contains the following sketches of general interest: Hon. Asa Packer; Gen. John A Rawlins; William P. Fessenden; Gen. Washington's Head; Life's Mission and Reward; Mother Ann Lee, the Shaker; The Cathedral of Milan; Are the Women to Blame? A beautiful face, how it is Marred; Chinese Proverbs and wise saws; On the Expression of the Eye. Price only 30 cents, or $3 a year. A new volume begins with the January number. Address S. R. Wells, publisher 389 Broadway, N. Y.

Harper for November completes the 39th volume. This monthly contains more reading matter than any other in this country or Europe. Contents of this number as interesting as any of its predecessors, and several of the articles are profusely illustrated. The publishers propose continuing this work as they have done for years, and will render it worthy of the liberal support it has enjoyed. $4 a year.

The Western Monthly for the coming Mo. is full of vigor and life characteristic of that section of the country. Its essays and criticisms are marked with those traits which indicate go ahead. The opening article is a brief sketch of Gen. Palmer, of Illinois, succeeded by a long list of well written articles on various subjects. Reed, Brown & Co., Chicago.

Tilton's Journal of Horticulture for October is of such a character as to attract all who take an interest in the subject to which it is devoted. It is not excelled by any similar publication in this country. Tilton & Co., Boston.

Balloon Ascension.

The following is Prof. Wise's own account of his balloon voyage:

LANCASTER, Pa., Oct. 17, 1869.

JACOB SECRIST—Dear Sir: When you agreed to let me make the voyage with your balloon from Orrville, for the consideration I proposed, on Friday last, it was my intention to sail to a point between south and east as near my home as possible, and before I had sailed as far as Massillon, it was evident from two currents of air then prevailing that it was possible to do so. When the Balloon merged into the clouds, cutting off my course and reckoning, I lowered her in order to see the land, and then I also discovered that the valve would not close tight again from the too slight pressure of the valve spring, as well as from the intervention of the congealed tallow slipping between the valve capper and its bed. The balloon having become fully distended by the expansion of gas, I could look up through the neck and perceive the light glimmer through the imperfect joint; by a few sudden snaps of the valve clapper it closed it a little, but not sufficient to prevent a constant leakage. Nevertheless I determined to sail until exhausted, which would certainly take four or five hours.

The fair grounds presented a beautiful aspect, teeming with its aggregated humanity, as well as with its innumerable vehicles, horses, tents, booths and oval race track. The country below seemed regularly deversified with farms and woods, roads, and villages, while the screams of the locomotives on the various railroads added interest to the scene. From the constant necessity of countervailing the leakage of the valve I could not keep my course as regular as it would have been otherwise, and soon discovered that the voyage could not be extended much over a hundred miles at the rate the air ship was going. My general course was a little south of east, and only when far above the clouds was the direction east.

When at the nearest point to Massilon I could distinctly hear the huzzas of many voices, but evidently not from that place as it was several miles north of me, and yet I could discover no crowd beneath me. The country beneath was dotted with gold colored spots, the effect of the sun shining through the broken clouds. It was truly beautiful. Thus I kept on, up and down, throwing out a little ballast all the time in order to keep the air vessel at its desired altitude. At 3 P. M., fifty minutes after my departure from the fair grounds, the balloon entered a dense stratum of clouds, and while passing up through, a strong smell of ozone was emitted. It affected my throat and wind pipe, and in less than three minutes I became as hoarse as a pond frog—scarcely able to utter a sound, and the cold for a few minutes was so intense as to cover my beard thick and bushy with hoar frost. After getting through this stratum into the sunshine, this intensely cold ozonic became less, and I experienced nothing of it in lowering down some miles to the east. Even my hoarseness abated somewhat, but it left an almost irresistable desire for sleep, and only by a constant motion of my eyelids and rubbing of my face, could I keep awake.

At 6 P. M. the sun was nearly touching my visible horizon, and Steubenville was in sight. I thought of landing there, but in a few moments I entered a bank of clouds, cold, dreary and dark; threw out considerable ballast and once more brought the sun above the western horizon, and thus had a second sunrise in the west. This was the most magnificent scene of the voyage.

The gorgeous colors of the western sky, illumined as it was by a vast sea of colored fire, and sombre earth beneath me, contrasting its pale yellow face from the reflection of the moon, was truly grand and unique, and I involuntarily cried: "Sunshine and moonshine! whoever saw the like of this?" And as I sank down, losing the light of the sun, the earth grew darker until it seemed involved in a semi-transparent vapor. The sudden transition from sunlight into moonlight made me purblind, and the transition from the sunbeams to shadow was not more rapid than was the condensation of gas, and down I came with a velocity too great to override a piece of high timbered land, darting the car into the top of a white oak tree. Seeing a house a few hundred yards ahead, I soon secured the help of a man and two boys, to whom I threw a coil of rope, and with this they drew me over to the house. It was on the farm of Joseph Gist, Esq., in Buffalo township, Brook County, West Virginia, six or seven miles from Wellsburg.

Very respectfully yours,
JOHN WISE.

Pioneer Preaching in the west.

At Lincoln, Illinois, during the past month, was celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the presiding eldership of Father Cartwright, of the Methodist Church. It was an edifying time to all who participated. Father Cartwright was one of the earliest and best known of the pioneer preachers of the west.

These pioneers did not enjoy the 'stated' preaching of the Gospel. The early preachers were not "ten thousand dollar" men, who rode in chariots, who dressed in 'purple and fine linen,' and who occupied houses with graperies and conservatories attached. They rode the circuit on horseback, exposed to rain and sleet, suffering cold and hunger, swimming rivers and camping at night on the open prairie, or seeking shelter beneath the roof of the humble cabin. When it was known that the preacher was to arrive on the Lord's day at an obscure hamlet, the people throughout the settlement 'gathered' in—some on horseback, some in farm wagons, and some afoot—the men dressed in linsey hunting-shirts dyed with copperas, their heads covered with coon skin caps with the tail dangling behind, and their feet encased in moccasins of deer skin. The women were dressed in homespun cotton, striped and cross-barred. To them the Sabbath was a day of gladness—a time of reunion, when neighbors, so to speak, widely separated, could come together and exchange greetings, and, during the intervals of service, talk over the events of the week. It was an era of good feeling.

The horses are hitched beneath the trees to some overhanging bough. The preacher mounts a rude stand in a grove and opens the services with prayer—fervid and awakening. He reads a hymn from his well thumbed pocket hymn-book—not gilt-edged—and lines out the words; then, starting some simple melody, the congregation join, and there rises up the sound of praise which breaks the solitude of the forest and comes back from the hills in answering echoes. Then follows the sermon, extemporaneous and abounding in illustrations of every day life; and as the preacher becomes warmed up, the passions of the audience are aroused and startled, and respond to his every appeal. What harm if, in the ecstacy of spiritual delight, those untutored minds shout, 'Glory!' 'Amen!' 'Hallelujah!'

But the times have changed. Last Sunday night we strayed into a fashionable church on Wabash avenue. A thousand gas-jets lighted up the interior—the groined arches and the canopy of blue and gold. A large and fashionable congregation—the women, not like Solomon in all his glory was arrayed like these—occupied the slips. As we scanned their faces, we ought in vain for the meek and the lowly, the weary and heavy laden. Before us stood the surpliced priest. His linen was of snowy whiteness, and each particular hair of his head was nicely laid. His discourse was eminently decorous—not a sentiment to shock the prejudices of a single individual, or to awaken a single unpleasant emotion. A zephyr playing over a summer sea is not more gentle; a lute not more soothing in its sound. Then, high above the tones of the choir—professional singers, exorbitantly paid, and who perhaps, during every night of the week have performed at the opera, in Fra Diavolo or The Barber of Seville.

As we issued out of the church with the self-satisfied throng, we thus moralized:

What would be the emotions of one of these backwodsmen, arrayed in his coon-skin cap, moccasins and hunting shirt, who was wont to grow fervid under the rousing appeals of Father Cartwright, if transferred to such a scene? Did the fisherman of Galilee preach to such audiences, and with such accessories? Christ came to preach to the poor, to proclaim the common humanity of our race, and the vanity of temporal distinctions. We have made religion an expensive luxury. It is as expensive to the laboring man to rent a slip in a fashionable church, as to rent a cottage. We array our wives and daughters in purple and fine linen, so that the wives and daughters of the poor, arrayed in calico and gingham feel out of place; and thus the very class for whom our Savior died, are repelled from celebrating his resurrection. The quality of the gospel is not strained. It is the same, whether in the cottage or in the palace. If it edify the rich, it will certainly fructify in the hearts of the poor and heavy-laden. "In my Father's house," said our Saviour, 'are many mansions;" but he did not add that some were set apart for the rich exclusively, and some for the poor—unless we suppose that the parable of Dives and Lazarus, and the implied impossibility of a camel passing through the eye of a needle, throw light upon this point. When we shall see both classes worshipping side by side, both partaking of the same elements, and both imbued with the sentiment that God is no respecter of persons, then we may have hopes of our common humanity—then believe that our modern Christianity is working out beneficent results.—Western Monthly for November.

A Chinese Idol in San Francisco.

A San Francisco correspondent, who has obtained access to one of the Chinese Joss-houses in that city describes what he saw:

"At one end of the room, reaching entirely across it, is a luxurious throne, composed of silk, satin and costly fabrics, embroidered heavily with gold and silver, and ornamented in the richest manner. In the center of this throne, up two steps on what seemed to be low, easy, silken cushions, sat Joss. Covering the throne and reaching to the ceiling was the most gorgeous canopy, rich with silk, velvet, gold and silver. This covered the throne entirely, except the portion occupied by old Joss, and the silk and the cords, and satin festooned with glittering richness above his head. In the center of all this grandeur sat Joss, very demurely and very tranquilly—I may say, very happily. He was a singular creature to be so powerful. I don't know what he was made of, but I think he was formed of clay. His raiment was the richest I have ever beheld, and probably fills the Chinaman's idea of the wicked one.

He looked to me like a very harmless and peaceful devil. I should not be afraid to grapple with him alone. He had a putty looking face, black eyes, black hair, and a fearful black whisker tied under his ears and reaching under his chin, and covering the whole of the neck and the most of the breast. His nose and cheeks gave indications of a heavy drinker—brandy, probably; and his stomach, round and fat seemed to say lager. His dress was so heavily loaded with gold and silver, and so mixed up with folds of silver and velvet, that I could not tell whether it was a coat, a dress or a mantle. I am pretty sure the fellow had on some kind of [illegible] cloth [illegible] adorned his head, but I could [illegible] that he had clubbed feet, nor the fingers were hooked. I endeavored see if he was a Chinese devil and a que, but his back was so cov with embroidery and furbelows t had to abandon the undertaking, f did not like to get too near him. front of the throne, in the cent the room, was an elegant counte sort of a table, carved and ornamen in a very costly and elaborate manner and inlaid with precious metals rare stones.

"This was also, in point of elegance between anything I ever saw—that it was so beautiful or tasteful, but that the profusion and rare character of the materials, and the nature the ornamentations. Everything about the room showed the same disregard of cost. A number of banners, of the costliest materials and most expensive workmanship, were about the room and a quantity of charts. Neither chair nor lounge was to be seen, nor stool nor an ottoman, nor anything sit upon. The Old Boy had the only seat in the room. I have said that everything in the room was of a most elegant character. I will add that the curtains and hangings, and the costly raiment, had once been of the brightest colors. They were now smoked and dusty, and soiled beyond redemption. To touch them was to be defiled. This destruction of property was done to please and flatter that drunkard among the heathens, under the silken canopy.

"They also presented him certain written charts, which he preserved by hanging about the walls. These charts are supposed to contain the speeches of various delegations to his Highness in about the same manner, I take it, as delegations make speeches to our president in Washington, when they make him presents. I cannot find out the manner in which the Chinese worship this enemy of the species except that they burn incense under his nose, make speeches to him and give him presents. The Chinamen don't like to talk on the subject. It does seem strange that a people so intelligent, so thoughtful, and so far advanced as the Chinese should take such a course to show their faith which is somewhere within every heart."

A Stage Scene.

A singular thing occurred at the St. Charles Theater, New Orleans, during Macready's engagement. The play was Virginius; and if ever the great tragedian felt himself pedestaled above all common humanity, it was when he was arrayed in Roman toga. On the occasion he was just preparing himself at the side scene for an impressive entrance, when the Dentatus of the evening, Mr. George Farren—an excellent actor and a genial gentleman, but much sought after by the fast boys of the period, and hence subject to occasional departures from the straight line of temperance—stumbled against him in a disagreeably familiar manner.

'Bill,' said he, in a suspiciously husky voice.

'Sir,' responded the great man, looking a million of daggers.

'I want you to understand, old boy—hic—you're not agoin' to get—ern.—many of the syllables to-night.'

'Why, what on earth is the matter with the man?' frigidly inquired Macready.

'Corned—my boy—that's all.'

'What do you mean by corned?'

'Tight.'

'Tight?'

'Blue.'

'Blue? Heavens! Oh, you don't mean that you are drunk?'

'That's about the size of it, old fellow.'

'This is dreadful—terrible! How did you get into such a beastly state, and how shall we go on with the play?'

'Don't ruffle your feathers about that,' said Farran, 'I've just swallowed a tumbler of vinegar and cayenne, and in about five minutes I'll be as sober as a judge.'

Somewhat relieved by the assertion, Macready softened down sufficiently to give him what assistance he could, and the play proceeded without any notice being taken of the inebriated centurion, until he came to the part where he had to be discovered lying on a bier—stage dead. Macready was busily attending to the arrangement of the body, while the front scene was going on; but each time that poor George—in whose system the pungent potion he had taken was producing a sort of qualmishness—attempted to straighten himself out, he started back again.

'It's no use,' he cried, 'if I lie down, I shall be as sick as a cat.'

'But, my dear fellow, you're dead—you must. The scene won't be long. Come, stretch yourself out.'

'Well, then, get me a pillow and I'll try,' said George, in a tone of agony.

The pillow was brought, and in the meantime Macready cautioned the stage-carpenters not to draw off the front scene until Dentatus was comfortably fixed. Now for heaven's sake be careful, he said to them, and do not move until I say 'all right.' The carpenters nodded compliance.

During this time, Macready, the pillow in his hand, was endeavoring to persuade Farran to lie still, which was almost a physical impossibility under the circumstance. At last in one of his paroxysms, the anxious tragedian, wishing to console him, and leaving over him in a painful but ludicrous contortion, said inadvertently: 'A few minutes longer, and you'll be all right.'

The carpenters heard their cue, and suddenly revealed to the astonished spectators a tableau never though of by Sheridan Knowles. Macready rushed off the stage with a zoological howl, and the act-drop descended upon a convulsed audience.—Western Monthly.

CUBA.—For about a year the Cubans have been endeavoring to free themselves from Spanish rule. Armies have been raised and organized, placed in the field, and numerous battles fought with varying success, but the preponderance seems to favor the Cubans, the people, who are doing battle for liberty. Very naturally the people of this country sympathise with the Cubans, and wish them abundant success. So strong is this feeling that not a few of our men are said to have joined the Cuban forces, and are doing what they can for the right. According to international law, or something of this sort, our government must pretend neutrality, at least, and, to carry out this idea government officers have interfered with preparations of a warlike character on the part of our citizens to aid the Cubans. It is thought by many that if our government were to acknowledge Cuba as an independent nation, as the English did the rebels during the recent war, that the moral effect would be such as to bring about Cuban independence at an early day. That is coming, and Spain may as well give up now as to be whipped into it. Home troubles in the Spanish government require all its power to keep things straight there.

Our government officials whose business it is to stop the rascality of whisky makers and whisky rings has been doing considerable in that way for the last few months. Numerous rascals, who have been stealing from the government, as it seems but natural that most of them will do whenever they get a chance, have been made to suffer some of the severest penalties of the law. For this the efficiency of faithful officers should have full credit. To show the malignant and murderous spirit of the whisky ring it is only necessary to state that a Mr. Brooks, of Philadelphia, a most faithful detective in finding out illicit transactions in liquor dealing, and who was instrumental in bringing many scamps to justice, was murdered, not long since, at Philadelphia—shot down by some of the whisky ring for no crime but the performance of his duty. Murder or submission to their authority is the ruling spirit among them. Drink or die seems to be their theory—drink and die is their practice.

New England and Canada were shaken by an earthquake on the 22d inst. People were much frightened at it.

Thomas Ewing, sr., who has been at Washington City a short time on business connected with the legal profession, was suddenly taken sick the other day, and for a time his life was despaired of, but is said to be improving.

A few days ago it was announced that the Virginia legislature elected two U. S. senators, but late accounts indicate some informality, and it is uncertain as to the vilidity of this choice.

Father Hyacinthe, a French Catholic priest, has created considerable sensation in the religious world by criticising his own church, because, as he alleges, it is behind the times in reformatory measures. He is now at New York where he is hegely lionized by protestant people and clergy.

It is now regarded as somewhat marvelous that Prof. Faih, a European philosopher, should predict earthquakes, as he has done in more instances than one, though he don't pretend to locate them. The idea is not so new, for Prof. Chapman of Philadelphia did the same thing nearly 20 years ago.

THE BIBLE IN SCHOOLS.—Some time ago our Canton neighbors had considerable controversy on the fact that the school directors had turned the Bible out of the public schools. Cincinnati is now undergoing the same process. They are having large public meetings on both sides, at which the question is discussed with much earnestness, and sometimes, perhaps, with not much Christian patience. Perhaps it is well to debate such questions, but to us it looks like one of those propositions of which the more that is said on either side but confirms the friends of each position that they are right. To us it looks unprofitable and useless, in a practical sense. It is sure to engender prejudices and produce alienations among people, while it settles nothing pro or con. Sectarian preachers used to discuss the merits of Calvinism and Arminisum. Sprinkling and Immersing, Arianism, Socinianism and various other isms, but they never settled any question by such waste of breath and expenditure of reasoning. To us this Bible question in schools is of a similar nature—it awakens and keeps alive sectarian feelings, and settles no principle of abstract or concrete right and wrong in the minds of the people. Disputants on both sides must realize the truism—

> Convince a man against his will,
> He's of the same opinion still.

Better, then, to drop such unprofitable discussions, and turn your batteries against the numerous moral wrongs which are inflicting such obvious evils upon society that nobody can be blind as to their causes and effects, than to do battle with each other on points which nobody can settle to the satisfaction of all parties. If local institutions of learning wish to use the Bible, by all means let them do so, and while they do so, if others choose to do without it why attempt to coerce them to do otherwise under the penalty of being denounced as heathens and barbarians. Have charity for each others' motives, but if any violate the great principle of doing as they would be done by they subject themselves to criticism.

It became necessary the other day for the Tennessee legislature to elect a United States senator. A. Johnson and several other candidates presented their names, and after a number of ballotings Johnson came within four votes of securing the place. On Friday a Mr. Cooper's name was presented, and he was elected over &in by four majority. Tennessee was one of the states claimed by the democracy of late, but here is their select and chosen champion beaten by a thorough uncompromising union man. Of such are democratic triumphs—like the apples of Sodom they turn to ashes.

Considerable agitation is going on in various parts of the country in favor of removing the national capital from Washington to a more central place westward. St. Louis has become conspicuously ambitious in that way, and the citizens have been holding meetings favoring the idea. That place would be geographically more central than Washington, but it is probable that a considerable time will elapse before the project is carried out.

The result of the election for governor of Ohio gives Hayes 7,591 majority. In 1867 his majority was 2,983. Something of a gain since then. Geary is re-elected governor of Pennsylvania by a majority of between 4000 and 5000. The republicans have carried Iowa by between 35.000 and 40,000 majority. Now let New York and New Jersey respond to these results.

Massillon Cemetery Improvement.

MR. EDITOR:—The spirit manifested at the meeting held at the Mayor's office on the evening of the 8th, by the numerous members of the association, was a source of great encouragment and gratification to the board of managers. With such a laudable willingness to advance the prosperity of the association, there can be little doubt about the much needed improvements being made.

Now that the committee appointed to solicit subscriptions have got a good start, would it not be well for them to call a public meeting at Madison Hall, and there at once give every one an opportunity to subscribe and thus facilitate the labors of the committee.

The directors have some assurance from non residents, of liberal donations, the amount of which will depend upon the liberality of our citizens. It is, therefore, earnestly hoped by the board of directors and others, that the enterprise will be vigorously pushed to success, now that the interest seems to be so general.

DELERIUM TREMENS.

The Moral Effect of the Late Election.

As the smoke of the conflict clears away every one can see more and more distinctly how important have been the results of the late elections. It is not alone that the republican party has elected governors and state tickets in the three great states of Ohio, Pennsylvania and Iowa; it is not alone that this gives us the assurance of the vitality of our party organization; and of its hold upon the popular sympathy. The success of the republican party in this election had a most salutary financial as well as political result. The national treasury was interested in it to the amount of of many millions of dollars, through the effect it would produce upon the capitalists of the world. If Ohio and Pennsylvania had been narried by the democracy the depreciation of our national securities would have been fearful; the national credit would have been destroyed, and repudiation, with all its horrors, would have been insured. The victory, however, is on the side of fidelity and trust, and the result will be widely felt. It tells heavily in favor of Secretary Boutwell's plan of refunding the national debt, at a much lower rate of interest. This will enable the government to pay off the debt easily, largely reduce taxation, save twenty-five millions of dollars to the people, and speedily resume specie payments. Then a dollar greenback will be worth a dollar in gold, and the whole financial problem will have been solved.

The effect which the election had upon the national credit is well illustrated by the following, which we clip from the Cleveland Leader:

"During the afternoon of election day there seemed to prevail among our business men a general impression that the vote would be light, that the republicans were badly organized, and that Pendleton would carry the state. The result was that there was a general tendency among the holders of bonds to get rid of them, and a prominent banker said that he never had so many bonds offered to him in a single day as during the afternoon of the day of election. But when the telegraph brought the news the next morning that the republican ticket was triumphantly elected, bonds rose in the market, and every one felt better."

Allcock's Porous Plasters.

Gainestown, Ala., Nov. 27, 1868.

Messrs. Thos. Allcock & Co:—During an extensive practice of ten years I have a frequent witness of the magical qualities of your Porous Plasters. I can certify that they are all you claim for them.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, M. D.

Dr. Myer, of Savannah, Ga., says they are the best mechanical supporters for weak muscles ever discovered; that by their warming properties they bring power and health, until the strength of the muscles are entirely restored; that he knows a case where Alcock's Plasters cured a gentleman of a weak spine, that he daily prescribes them in his practice, with the happiest results.

We, the Druggists of Massillon, call the attention of our customers to the letters published below of the wonderful efficacy of Dr Roback's Stomach Bitters, Dr. Roback's Scandinavian Blood Purifier, and Dr. Roback's Scandinavian Blood Pills. We have been selling these medicines long enough to know that they are all they are recommended to be, and that the certificates of cures published are true.

ATHENS, ATHENS CO., O., August 10, 1859.

DR. C. W. ROBACK,

Dear Sir:—Permit me to say in relation to your Scandinavian Blood Pills and Blood Purifier, that I have used several boxes and bottles, and have found their effects on my system to be all that is claimed for them in your advertisements. I have also seen the effects of your Pills upon a child four or five years old, in expelling worms from the bowels.—One dose given the child, confined to the bed, and apparently very sick, caused the worms to come away from it in great numbers, and they were found crawling and scattered all about. The child thus relieved recovered immediately, and is now well and hearty.

Yours, &c.

JOSEPH HERROLD.

Part of to day's edition is printed on an inferior quality of paper, the new supply not arriving in time. But we are all right now, and will endeavor to avoid a like mishap again.

The Methodist Mite Society will meet at the residence of E. B. Leighley, on the corner of Mill and Tremont streets, on Monday evening next. All are respectfully invited to attend.

FREQUENT ADDITIONS are being made to our list, for our people are more and more realizing the fact that as the INDEPENDENT increases in years, it also enhances in value If diligence, industry and close attention to business are appreciated—and we find that they are—in the making of a newspaper we shall spare no pains to meet the wishes and wants of our citizens and patrons Etc long it will be seven years since we took the work in hand of resurecting a newspaper here—for there was none at Massillon on our arrival,—and ever since that time we have labored diligently to set forth the advantages this city affords to all classes of persons engaged in laudable business. Perhaps our efforts may not have come up to the expectations of some, but this is not for the want of effort to realize their most sanguine wishes As we have faithfully stood up for the interests of this community we have no fears that our patrons, and citizes generally will stand by us

THE TEMPLE VISITOR, the organ of the I. O. G. T. of Ohio, heretofore printed semi-monthly is new to appear weekly, and will be printed at Dayton, by J B. King, G W S., and edited by Bro W. S. Peterson. We hope it will be well sustained by the tens of thousands of friends of temperance in our state, and feel sure that Bro. Peterson will make it a live, vigorous paper.

It was an error last week to state that Dr Lyon had charge of the patient, Peters, who had his arm injured on the railroad the other day. It was Dr. Metz who was called upon, and we believe was aided by Dr. Lyon in fixing up the unfortunate man's injured arm.

Our clothing men ought to have a lively time just now, as overcoats and shawls are quite necessary to keep one comfortable when out doors It is wintery cold part of the time, but we look for Indian summer yet, when the days and nights will be more pleasant

PROSPECT HILL NURSERY FOR SALE.—Having decided to close out my nursery interest at Massillon, I offer my entire property—not including some lots accessible either in whole or as desired to purchasers. This property is beautifully located just out of the city limits—with the exception of a few acres—being handsomely located for Suburban Residences, overlooking the town and country, commanding a delightful prospect, and is unsurpassed as a healthy location Abundance of fine fruit of the best trees, in great variety, son of superior quality, admirably adapted for a small fruit farm. For terms &c the proprietor can be consulted on the premises up to Nov 15th, after that date address S. B. MARSHALL Cleveland, O.

WELLMAN STOVE.—Many of our older citizens well remember Marshall Wellman, once a very active and energetic citizen of this place, but who has for years been a resident of Pennsylvania For a considerable time he has been turning his attention to improvements in stoves and has finally succeeded in producing a neat, convenient and useful article in this line—one which combines utility, comfort and economy. Like a common grate it has an open front, and its cheerful fire is pleasant to sit by, while it consumes fine or coarse coal into ashes, leaving none half burned or wasted all the time throwing out a fine supply of heat and light enough to read by. Some of our citizens have been trying this stove, and are so pleased with it as to use no other; and wherever introduced on a fair trial, it does seem to us that complete satisfaction will be rendered. Persons desiring to see the action of one of these stoves can do so by calling at the shop of David Stevens, just west of the canal, who will give all necessary information concerning them He keeps them for sale, and will be glad to accommodate customers.

MR S B. MARSHALL formerly of this place, now of Cleveland as will be seen by his notices elsewhere in to-day's paper offers very valuable property for sale Persons desirous of purchasing will find it to their interest to examine the premises indicated, for they occupy a most favorable position in many respects Whoever is so fortunate as to purchase this property will have a home which would be envied by all who appreciate such advantages as it combines

Our young friend, W. H. Daughaday, of Canton, as may be seen by his new advertisement in to-day's paper, has been replenishing his ample stock of goods. We are pleased to note his success, which he well deserves for his attention to business.

FRUIT TREES.—Having decided to close out my entire nursery interests at Massillon, I offer a complete assortment, including apple, peach, pear, cherry, plum, quince, grape vines, raspberries, gooseberries, strawberries, currants, blackberries, evergreens, &c. All intending to plant will do well to call or send in their orders, as the demand far exceeds the supply. S. B. MARSHALL.

TEMPERANCE ERA.—We almost feared that this excellent paper had ceased to exist as it failed to reach us for a week or two at the close of last year, but now we learn it is to continue on a permanent footing with a liberal and increasing patronage, and will prove a power in the land Heretofore it has been printed as a piece of job work—now the managers are going to work in earnest, purchasing material on which to print it themselves So the cause of prohibition is not dead yet in Ohio.

In this connection we would suggest to those papers which have been sneering at this first effort to make a political question, an account of the paucity of votes received by the candidates, that the end is not yet The men who are at the head of this movement are not of that class that advance backward—Onward, excelsior, is their motto. This little cloud in the political horizon, and this little stone cut out of the mountains of truth, will both grow, the one to overshadow the country with its benign influence, and the other to increase and overcome all obstacles that may attempt to interpose. Let those who sneer remember the fate of other parties which ignored the right.

THE OPERA HALL, although in an unfinished condition, is already a place of beauty, as is stated by those who have had the pleasure of seeing it recently, of which our community may well be proud. Its gorgeous appearance will be a more attractive exhibition, and compensate better for seeing it, to those who can appreciate such works of art, than many a show which has cost the visitor his fifty cents Mons Papot, the French artist, is said to be a fine painter, and he is now successfully leaving his marks in the fine opera hall in such a manner as to make it a place where all lovers of good taste wish to be But it is well not to be impatient to see what forms of beauty will meet the eye when the work is complete as there is much yet to be done, which will require several weeks to accomplish As has often been remarked, this building and especially the new hall is a credit to the taste, enterprise and management of the proprietors, and living evidences of the skill of the architect who planned and his assistants who carried out his instructions.

READ.—These long evenings, when the day's work is done, can be profitably spent in reading, and as we are somewhat in the business of furnishing to the amount of several volumes of reading matter every year, now is a good time to subscribe for the INDEPENDENT. We hope to enrich its columns with the best selections that come to hand, and will be much obliged if our people who write will furnish original matter on any subject they may choose to discuss. Our home made way of scribbling may seem monotonous—though we have to go through the motions weekly—and for this reason a variety of style and matters considered will enhance the value of the paper. If our older citizens, many of whom we know can write well, do not feel disposed or think they have not the leisure to contribute in this way, there are many younger persons, ladies and gentlemen, who are somewhat experienced in the art of composition—let them not be backward in giving their thoughts to the public. While they thus aid in instructing the public—for they can do so—they are improving themselves, and more particularly necessary is this the case if any of this class contemplate entering upon public life hereafter. Among the best and most successful writers in our own or other counties began their career as essayists, authors and distinguished poets and statesmen, first discovered their fitness for authorship to the public through the medium of the newspaper—in some cases, perhaps, in papers as little known as this one. Help us, then, give reading matter to the public, and it will be appreciated by all who read. Reading a newspaper is far better employment than whiling away the hours in groggshops amid the fumes of rotten liquor and a nauseating stench of tobacco smoke, and where the company often is rough in manners and in speech. Graduates through these institutions are generally illy qualified to become public men, and if by chance they are elected to office they often show their inefficency to perform any responsible duty which may devolve upon them. while the attentive newspaper reader has an instructor before him whose ideas are culled from the best writers in the various departments of literature, art and science. Then read the papers with discrimination, rejecting that which is trifling and profiting by the good and useful. And when you read be sure to think.

TIME.—Mr. Coleman is making the most praiseworthy efforts to have the time for this city accurately measured, and for this purpose he has gone to the expense of procuring a chronometer, an instrument for noting time which has cost the ingenuity of man to make as nearly perfect as has shall attain. A good chronometer will not vary true time but few if any seconds in a year, and such a one Mr Coleman endeavored to secure. It has cost him a considerable sum of money, and not to stop here Mr Coleman is about to procure other instruments by which he can ascertain true time from the movements of the suns. The north star is understood to be the standard to go by, for that is an unchanging permanent fixture in the heavens, We otherwise measure hours or days by the movements of the sun, but this plan is a rather vague one, as, according to astronomical calculations, the sun is not in true time but about four days in the year. Its movements may approximate correct time, but when accuracy is required other standards are to be resorted to. As at other places we often have confusion here in keeping time by the ringing of bells blowing of whistles, and watching trains on the railroad. The railroad keeps its own time, taking Columbus as the starting point, but that is no guide for us, as that place must be at least one degree or fifteen minutes west of us. Our church bells seem sometimes to be rung at random, and no two of the whistles are exactly alike for any length of time Some of our establishments have say one hundred men, if one of the shops loses fifteen minutes each, on account of confusion in time, here are twenty-five hours work lost to the employer. This is liable to be the case in the present state of affairs. For this reason, if for no other, it is highly desirable to attain as near accuracy as possible To do this we must have some acknowledged standard to device the days into hours and minutes, and then those errors which we so often witness would be obviated On these accounts we are sure that our citizens will—or at least ought, to encourage Mr Coleman in his laudable endeavors. Young says "we take no note of time but by its loss." Then let us try to save our lossess in this way correctly

This infallible remedy does not, like the poisonous irritating snuffs and strong caustic solutions with which the people have long been humbugged, simply palliate for a short time, or drive the disease to the lungs as there is danger of doing in the use of such nostrums, but it produces perfect and permanent cures of the worst cases of chronic catarrh, as thousands can testify. Cold in the head is cured with a few applications. Catarrhal headache is relieved and cured as if by magic. It removes offensive breath, loss or impairment of the sense of smell, or hearing, watering or weak eyes, and impaired memory, which are caused by the virulence of catarrh, as they all frequently are. We offer $500 for a case of catarrh that we cannot cure.

B. A. FAHNESTOCK'S
VERMIFUGE.

It is now over forty years since this medicine was offered as a remedy for Worms, and from that time its reputation has steadily increased until at the present day it is almost universally acknowledged throughout nearly all parts of the world to be the sovereign remedy Worm Confections, made more for the purpose of pleasing the palate than of overcoming the disease, have been manufactured all over the country; but their short lease of life is nearly exhausted, and B A Fahnestock's Vermifuge continues to grow in favor daily. Children often look pale and sickly from no other cause than worms, and sprems are most frequently the result of these hidden suppers and miners

When they are irritable and feverish, sometimes crying food and eating ravenously, again refusing wholesome order, tossing restlessly in sleep, moaning and grinding the teeth, these be assured these symptoms are indications of worms

Uneasiness and pain in the abdomen, with scouring and headache are frequently another upon the presence of these hidden suppers and miners

A gradual wasting away or emaciation of the body is one of the most common attendants upon worms. These also prey on and injure, and destroy the more sluggish imparted to the stomach by the presence of worms, causing many other diseases, and baffles every incredibly with at being aware of the cause.

Many a helpless child has been laid in the grave, when the disease which caused its death has been entirely misunderstood, and when worms have really been the cause. It has been proved beyond a doubt that worms exist in the human system from earliest infancy, therefore parents—especially mothers, who are more constantly with their children, cannot be too cautious in the first symptoms of worms, and so surely as they exist, can they be surely and speedily removed from the most delicate infant, by the daily use of B. A. Fahnestock's Vermifuge.

Physicians don't hesitate to recommend it and use it in their practice, and many of the most eminent of the profession, from all parts of the country, testify to its uniform success. In fact, it never fails. It has frequently been given to children as a safe purgative, not suspecting the cause of the illness, and large quantities of worms were discharged and immediate relief had.

Great caution must be used by every purchaser, to be his own judge in the sense, and to examine every bottle he buys of it. The simple name of Fahnestock is not sufficient. He must look closely and care ully to see that he obtains the B. A FAHNESTOCK, and be satisfied with nothing else.

SOLE PROPRIETORS.

Let us Protect Ourselves.

The physical structure of the strongest human being is vulnerable everywhere. Our bodies are endowed by nature with a certain negative power, which protects them, to some extent, from unwholesome influences; but this protection is imperfect, and cannot be safely relied on in unhealthy regions, or under circumstances of more than ordinary danger. Therefore, it is wisdom, it is prudence, it is common sense to provide against such contingencies, by taking an antidote in advance: in other words, by fortifying the system with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters—the most complete protective against all the epidemics and endemic maladies that has ever been administered in any country. As a remedy for dyspepsia, there is no medicine that will compare with it. Whoever suffers the pangs of indigestion, anywhere on the face of the earth where Hostetter's Stomach Bitters can be procured, does so voluntarily; for, as surely as truth exists, this invaluable tonic and alterative would restore his disordered stomach to a healthy condition. To the nerves it is also especially beneficial, and in cases of confirmed constipation it also affords speedy and permanent relief In all cases of fever and ague the bitters is more potent than any amount of quinine, while the most dangerous cases of bilious fever yield to its wonderful properties. Those who have tried the medicine will never use another, for any of the ailments which the Hostetter Bitters profess to subdue. To those who have not made the experiment we cordially recommend an early application to the Bitters whenever they are stricken by disease of the digestive organs.

NEWSPAPERARCHIVE®

A Contented Proprietor.

I have plenty of dutiful vassals,
Have plenty of gold, and to spare
I have plenty of beautiful castles—
But my castles are built in the air;
And my vassals are all airy creatures,
From beautiful dreamland are they;
They drive me to bed
And magnificent laid
And tell me my coach stops the way!
But, oh, what a pest,
When it comes to a test
I am kept in a deceitful delay!
A plague on those wild filth vassals!
You can't trust a word that they say,
And I've heard that my beautiful castles
Are sadly inclined to decay.

Father Wisdom advised me to sell them
To the public—at their own price—
And Fancy cried out to sell them,
For Fancy's the auctioneer;
But the market by no means was lively,
For castles then all were sold cold;
Land and iron were brisk
But only mere wood stick
To invest on my judgment I hold.
So my interest mild,
I'm full thereby,
And with me they're not sold,
And are never at all wish'd.
For my vassals still play me with gold,
My castles and I shan't be parted
'Till the heart of the owner be cold

Again Father Wisdom addressed me—
He's a horrid old bore in his way—
He said rats and mice would indest me,
As crumbled my towers to decay.
"They never can crumble, good father,
They're lasting when once they're built;
O, castles of air
We're quickly repair'd,
And the home of the spirit's re-pair'd."
So I leave Father Wisdom
To nag cold and solemn,
As the rapid fled hours do pass on
And they heed just as freely as ever
A turnip sliced thus stood in the sun.
Oh! ne'er from my castles I'll sever
'Till the cold stone my gloss shall be run.

Dio Lewis' plan for a temperance reform, as laid down in a lecture at Boston is as follows: 'Organize at a public meeting—for example, in a town of five thousand inhabitants—a committee of fifty or one hundred women, who, through a sub-committee, will prepare an appeal from the women of the town to the dealers of intoxicating drinks. Appeal in hand, the committee will call upon each of the ramsellers, read their earnest, womanly prayer, sing a verse, join in a brief prayer, and so pass on to the next. Ten such visits, on ten successive days, will generally leave nothing to be done.'

A correspondent of Zion's Herald says that he was once invited to attend a theological gathering summoned for the purpose of exegetical discussion in a German university. The assembled students were each provided with a cigar and a pot of beer, and amid the fumes they discussed the authorship of one of the Epistles. To us such a mixture of lager, cigar smoke and theology is indecorous enough. But who knows but in ten years it will seem just as incongruous for a Christian to bring a tobacco perfumed breath with him into prayer meeting—or anywhere else?

How to preserve ice for a considerable length of time, for domestic purposes, and especially the sick room, is told by an exchange. 'Make two bags of stout woolen fabric; the outer bag should be made at least two inches wider each way than the inner one. After placing one bag inside of the other, stuff feathers between the two, and sew the bags together at the top. Put a block of ice into a bag of this description, and it will be preserved for nearly a week, when under exposure, it will melt in less than an hour.

The N. Y. Sun reports that Dr. Thompson, in a late Sunday evening sermon, stated that church members who gamble in gold should be disciplined, and adds that some of the brokers engaged in the late Wall st. conspiracy were present in the pews before him at the time. Any one can be certain that the truth was not oiled any the more on that account. Several other New York pastors have dealt with the matter in like faithfulness.

The planting of trees is encouraged in Iowa by a law, which, it is stated, provides that the planter of forest trees is, for every acre, released from taxation for ten years on one hundred dollars valuation; and for each acre of fruit trees planted, from taxation of fifty dollars valuation for five years. The same provisions as to fruit trees are applied to the planting of shade trees and hedges along the highways.

The Friends, at their Iowa yearly meeting, gave direction that next year the subordinate meetings should send up the number of members who habitually use tobacco! Now for the other denominations. Let us have the round numbers of the spitting fraternity.

Dr. Robbins' Bitters.

By reference to Dr. Robbins' advertisement, on the thirty-second column, it will be seen that the doctor has introduced to the notice of the public a new article in the line of Stomach Bitters. These articles are daily becoming very popular, from the fact that they are prepared for a sense of the wonderful curative properties they derive from the very powerful but delicate nature of the roots and herbs of which they are composed, and be worth in effect is natural we have had the pleasure of testing the quality of these bitters, and have got found to possess in the one thing needful in every well regulated family. See advertisement. Office and laboratory, Nos. 56, 58 90, and 62 East Third street. For sale everywhere.

Look here, reader, we do not wish to tell you that consumption can be cured by the large size bottle of some nostrum that Dr. Wonderful, or any other man, has discovered a remedy that will take more than forever, and leave death no prey for want of work. No, you have heard enough of that, and do not wonder that you have by this time become disgusted with it. But we will tell you that Dr. Sage's Catarrh remedy will positively cure the worst cases of Catarrh, we only assert that which [illegible] to certify to. Try it and you will be convinced.

Massillon, O., August 11, 1869.

Received per hands of Jas. H. Hunt, agent of Security Life Insurance and Annuity Co., of N. Y. Two Thousand Dollars for insurance on the life of The. A. Ricks. I take great pleasure in bearing testimony to the promptness with which the Security pays its losses.
WM. F. RICKS, Adm'r.

Tho' this company has demonstrated time and again the value of life insurance by distributing among the widows and orphans of

175 Members the sum of $500,000,

Yet its losses in proportion to the number insured and amount of insurance has been few and light, according to a compilation from the last published report of the Massachusetts Insurance Commissioner, showing the ratio of claims by death to policies issued during the last 12 months in the leading life insurance companies, thus:

Name of Company.	Ratio.	Person Ins.
Mass Mutual	21 one death in every	476
N. England Mut.	21 one do do	500
Etna	32 one do do	313
Connecticut Mut	30 one do do	333
Equitable	30 one do do	333
Germania	41 one do do	244
Globe Mutual	28 one do do	357
Knickerbocker	2 one do do	238
Mutual Life	11 one do do	715
Mutual Benefit	32 one do do	313
New-York Life	52 one do do	192
North American	29 one do do	345
Security	9 one do do	1111
American Popular,	6 one do do	1668

The old companies are ever harping upon the ratio of their expenses and proportion to business done; whereas, to every person seeking insurance the fact that the profit and loss account is very important. Taken together the cost of insurance depends upon the vitality of the company in which you insure. And the best proof of inherent vitality is the low ratio of claims in the past. Those wishing to procure valuable life insurance can do so by calling on JAMES H. HUNT, Esq., at Exchange Bank. JACOB HEATON,
